

Get a little closer to Cuba at Havana Central's mojito and cigar Thursday nights.

Havana Cafe where you can get Mojitos and Cigars every Thursday. Image courtesy Colangelo PR

WITH THIS WEEK'S ANNOUNCEMENT from President Obama that the U.S. will ease travel restrictions to Cuba (a bit), it's only a matter of time before everyone in New York is wearing guayaberas and pumping mambo music through their earbuds.

Hop on the Cubano bandwagon early at Times Square restaurant Havana Central. Starting this week, every Thursday night is now "Mojito/Cigar night." During happy hour each Thursday from 5:30 to 8:30 pm, order a 10 Cane Rum Mojito for $12, and receive a free hand-rolled cigar made of choice Dominican tobacco (sorry, the embargoes aren't that relaxed yet and 10 Cane Rum, which is delicious, hails from Trinidad*). Of course, in Mayor Mike's NYC, you'll have to smoke your stogie outside, but that's okay, it means Chef Stanley Licairac's casual Cuban fare will taste even better, and your clothes won't smell like stale ashtray the next day. Stick around after happy hour for live music representing dance-inducing sounds from all over Latin America.

While there are two other Havana Central locations in the city, you're only gonna score the Thursday night deal at the Times Square locale.

!Vamos a echar un pie!